

Operations manager appointed at Freeman Technology

Powder characterisation company Freeman Technology has appointed Jamie Clayton to the new position of operations manager. He will be based at the company's head office in Welland, UK. With a background in control engineering and technical sales, he will assume responsibility for all the day-to-day activities of the company including overall management of the administration, production, R&D, sales and customer support teams. "We want to deliver the best possible technical and applications support to our customers at all times and part of Jamie's new role will be to ensure that every aspect of our operation runs efficiently", said director of operations Tim Freeman.

www.freemantech.co.uk

Jamie Clayton